THE PACTOLUS DECISION.

We publish to-day a decision by Judge Dole, in the case of the Pactolus Chinamen, which will be read with deep interest by all classes. The statement of the facts is somewhat condensed, but the decision itself we reproduce in full. The Court finds that all the characteristic provisions of the Chinese Restriction Act of '90 are unconstitutional and void. The decision proceeds upon the simple ground that the Chinese as soon as they arrive, and before landing, are within the territorial jurisdiction of the Kingdom, and therefore subject to its laws on the one hand, and entitled on the other to their protection and to the benefit of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution to all residents. Constitutional rights cannot be waived or surrendered by contract. A man cannot by agreement forfeit his liberty, neither can he forfeit, except by crime, his constitutional right to free employment and residence.

The argument of the decision is very forcible, and will lead people generally to reflect. Should it be sustained by the full Court, which is by no means certain, it will have far reaching consequences. It will add another to the long list of wrecked statutes with which our law books are strewn. The Chinese question is a sunken rock on which our most astute lawgivers have shattered their ships, and it now looks as though the Act of '90 might share the fate of its numerous predecessors.

A BIG BLUFF.

Last night Mr. Whaley, the alleged tourist, was playing pool in the Hotel bar-room with Marshal Wilson. Both of these persons, it is presumed, had been drinking and had lost whatever sense they may have possessed of decency and fitness. Mr. Whaley made a bet with another individual that the ADVERTISER reporter would not dare enter the bar-room of the Hotel on that or any other night, the idea being that Mr. Whaley would assault him if he did.

Now we have only a word or two to say to this. That Mr. Whaley, who is not engaged in any respectable business, should spend his time in bar-rooms making raffianly bets will surprise no one and is no concern of ours; it is a matter of taste, or the want of it, and we readily believe that he knows best how to find a congenial environment. That the Marshal of the kingdom should be employed in a similar manner, playing pool in a bar-room with his coat off, drinking, and actively accessory to a proposed breach of the peace, may not, unhappily, be a surprise, but it cannot fail to arouse indignation and disgust in the breast of every law-abiding citizen. If he has a taste for low company he should suppress it. It is a manifest breach of propriety that the Marshal of the Hawaiian Kingdom should consort with bar-room loafers and men of tainted reputations. What guarantee can the public have under such circumstances that the police department will be honestly conducted? It is our duty as a public journal to protest against such vulgar abuses. That the head of the police department of the entire Kingdom should have so little sense of what is due to his office, is a public scandal.

Huntsman's History.

MR. EDITOR:—The process of making cast steel was invented by Benjamin Huntsman in 1740. The "Encyclopedia Britannica" states that he was a German, born in 1704, and began life as a watchmaker. In the state of the arts at that time the discovery was of the greatest importance. The story has been often told of how the process was guarded as a priceless secret, and how it was found out by a workman of a rival manufactory disguised as a tramp, who obtained permission on a winter night to sleep before the furnaces. (See "Steel's Fourteen Week's in Chemistry.") Two sons of the inventor came to America in 1761. One of them was killed at Bennington in the war of the Revolution. The other settled in Kentucky and grew rich and fat by the means so much in favor in Hawaii—a plantation and slaves. His son felt a divine call to preach the gospel; he founded Methodist missions in Missouri, and converted thousands to Christ. He settled in Benton county, and had a family of four sons. When the Rebellion broke out the sons went into the Confederate army. J. A. Huntsman fought in the ranks under General Price. After the war he went to Austin, Nevada, where he practices his profession to this day. D. L. Huntsman, his son, was born on the family domain in Renton county, Missouri; was educated at the Clinton Academy, Clinton, Missouri; taught school for six years in Austin, Richmond, and other Nevada towns, and studied law with Judge McKenney; spent two years mining in Idaho, one teaching in California, and in an evil moment yielded to the migratory instinct and engaged to the Hawaiian Board of Education; taught school two years in Hawaii; was then admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court of the Hawaiian Islands, and is at present practicing law in Honolulu.

That is the outline of D. L. Huntsman's lineage and record. Most of the facts can be found in reference books in the Honolulu Library. If the "One Who Wants to Know" desires the details of the family history for three hundred years, let him apply to C. R. Huntsman, Battle Mountain, Nevada, and he will be shown the records in two volumes, 8vo. It contains little to brag about and nothing to be ashamed of. Only repeated personal attacks in the editorial columns of the ADVERTISER renders it necessary to reply to defend my reputation with those who are not acquainted with me personally. As a teacher, I have frequently undergone official inquiries as to my intellectual condition. I have a document signed by the Governor and Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State of Nevada, certifying that my mind was at that time (1889) in good working order, and sufficiently stored with information in eighteen different branches of learning. In September, 1888, I took an examination at Los Angeles, Cal. Of one hundred and thirty-two teachers from every part of the United States, I obtained the highest total number of credits, not only of that examination, but of all that had gone before.

Of course the public is justly suspicious of new men who appear here. The country has been overrun with scoundrels and refugees from justice; but I believe that they have, without exception, appeared wearing the cloak of religion, and of late years they have all made their debut in the pulpit of the Fort street Church, as did the Rev. Dr. Hammond and the equally Rev. Dr. Hattenbeck, and the Rev. Dr. Ben. Hogan, etc.

D. L. HUNTSMAN.

Another Version.

MR. EDITOR: About two years ago there was thrown upon our shores "a youth to fortune and fame unknown." As he marched up our principal street, he neither gazed to the right or left, and for weeks was lost to view. As time wore on it was whispered around Hilo by the giddy four hundred that there was a duke among them in disguise. So a committee was appointed to wait upon this scion of a noble house. He was found at the residence of one of our copper-colored six hundred a few leagues from town, evidently happy in his new-found love. When the committee gazed upon this long-haired, lank and æsthetic youth, they were utterly overcome, and all sighed for the love of so darling and utterly utter ducky.

All our love is all for one.
Yet that love he heedeth not;
He is coy and cares for none—
Sad and sorry is our lot.
Ah Miserie!

This young man became the rage with society people; 4 o'clock teas with ice were given, but it was said outside by the lower strata that a gin fizz with a stick in it would be more acceptable to this second edition of Bunthorne:

Am I alone
And unobserved? I am.
Then let me own,
I'm an æsthetic sham.

Thus appeared Lee Dow Huntsman when he landed in Hilo. For over a year this fellow was the idol of the ladies; 2 o'clock socials were arranged, when this snide read Browning, selections from Ibsen, Tolstoi and other free and easy authors, when he should have been in the cane field with a hoe earning his living.

As happens to all of us sooner or later, Mr. Huntsman was taken sick; in fact was near death's door when that "cursed missionary," Dr. Wetmore, and his noble daughter stepped in and had him carried from one of the native houses to their own home, and for four weeks or more nursed this man as only gentle hands can. And how has he repaid it? Oh, base ingratitude! But why write thus? It is the old, old story. Why is it that the fair sex make so much of every long haired tramp, be he doctor of law, doctor of divinity or doctor of medicine, not knowing whether they are graduates of Yale College or San Quentin? Such is life.

Hawaiian Hardware Co., Ltd.

Monday, Dec. 21, 1891.

Our holiday trade this year has exceeded that of last year far beyond our expectations. Our desire to have several of the thousands of dollars that would be floating around stop in our store has been fully realized, and we have established a reputation for good values that was entirely unknown in Honolulu before.

We have introduced into the hardware trade lines that have heretofore held places entirely outside the charmed circle. It pleased you and to see you happy makes us likewise.

This week the handsome sets of Carvers will meet in convention; Silverware, Rockwood and Novelties will be present and may probably insist on taking an active part but Cutlery is King. We have tired you with lengthy description of the various articles we have thrown open to the public gaze during the past month and we don't intend going into details with Carvers. There is one set, though, that requires more than brief mention: 1st, it has the conventional ten-inch blade made of the best quality of steel. The fork and knife steel are equally good.

The handles are made of pure ivory, old style—no imitation about them, about the color of No. 1 sugar and are almost plain. It is a substantial Set, and entirely new in design. There's another—but then we said we would not go into detail; if we did we would be telling a— and you would not read it.

A great many inquiries have been made lately for glass suitable for serving ice cream or custards. We have a glass cup by the last sailing vessel from the Coast that was made for the purpose. The design is after one of the prettiest cut patterns and looks well.

Barrels and barrels of stamped ware have arrived. So many different articles that we don't know where to put them: artistic arrangement of the lot is out of the question; you'll not be able to see all of it in a dozen visits, possibly not in twenty, but you can ask for what you want. Cuspidores in nickel; Spice Boxes, small but complete in the number of boxes for every imaginable spice; and hundreds of other articles.

Another article in glass is the Fish Globe. The streams of Honolulu produce gold fish that pan out rich and assay a good many dollars to the ton. The ordinary fish globe is not good enough for these handsomely decorated fish so we have imported a line in keeping with their beauty. The globes stand rather higher than the old style and are beautifully decorated at the top. So handsome are they that the fish will have to wear blue ribbons around their neck to keep in harmony with them.

This week is the last you will have to select your Christmas goods. Articles bought on the 26th can hardly be called Christmas gifts. Our store, you know, is the best place to buy them.
